MADE LIVING BY SLEEPING

Londoner of a Couple of Centuries Ago Seems to Have Had Something of a "Snap."

In these lean and strenuous times one might do worse and emulate the example of Nicholas Hart. He had no need to work for a living, had Nicholas. He slept for it. On August 9, 1711, the following advertisement appeared in the pages of the London Daily Courant: "Nicholas Hart, who slept last year in St. Bartholomew's hospital, intends to sleep this year in the Cock and Bottle in Little Britain."

Addition, that very competent journalist, was attracted by the advertisement and took up the matter in the Spectator. He found upon investigation that Nicholas Hart "is every year seized with a periodical fit of sleeping, which begins upon the 5th of August and ends on the 11th of the same month. That on the first of the month he grew dull, on the 2nd appeared drowsy, on the 3d fell to yawning, on the 4th began to nod, on the 5th dropped to sleep, on the 6th was heard to snore, on the 7th turned himself in his bed, on the 8th recovered his former posture, on the 9th fell a stretching, on the 10th, about midnight, awoke, on the 11th, in the morning called for a little small beer." The result of this sleep was that Hart earned "enough to support himself for a twelvemonth."

Valuable Mole-skin.

The skin of the mole is much sought for the manufacture of furs, and those made use of in this country have been heretofore imported from Europe, but it is entirely likely that we shall supply this demand by the home product at no distant time. The biological survey of the United States has recently made some examinations into the qualities of the domestic mole for this purpose, and it has been discovered that the animal of the northeastern part of this country is superior to the foreign animal, the fur being finer and having other advantages. A report of the investigation has been printed and the cultivation of the mole for its fur is recommended as a profitable industry.
